While the notion of small production and handcrafted wine has long been synonymous with the California industry, French Champagne imports have been limited to a few mass-produced brands. By contrast, grower-producer Champagne is the truest expression of the small vineyards and families that produce it, comprising less than five percent of the total Champagne imported. Sherri Corker, founder of Sherri's Champagne, developed a palate for the distinctive bubbly in college. She smiles affectionately while remembering her father's words, "You have always had a Champagne taste!" Corker's business delivers to its clients six unique bottles twice per year. In her previous career as an architect, Corker was driven to create distinctive, quality projects that echo the context of their environment. Similarly, grower-producer Champagne shares the beauty of its origin, an ageless testament to the unique French terroir.

“Grower-producer will forever change the way one views Champagne.”

How do you think your clients would characterize you?

Sophisticated, intelligent, enchanting, creative and driven.

What is one thing your clients would be shocked to know about you?

I grew up a tomboy in South Georgia and, still longing for the outdoors, developed an affinity for fly-fishing... tight lines!

Who or what inspires you most?

Women who overcome adversity to accomplish the impossible! I serve on The Buck Institute's Buck Advisory Council and have volunteered for the past four years to witness brilliant women working in the science and research on aging. A portion of my profits goes to the Double X program to benefit women and girls in STEM education.

Who has most influenced your work?

My twelve-year-old daughter influences me to lead as fearlessly as I can, no matter the profession. I have to set the bar high, so she sees that anything she strives for can become her reality.

What is your most prized possession?

Our three dogs: two hilarious dachshunds and a feisty Chihuahua!

What are your favorite hobbies?

Hiking, fly-fishing, travel, observing the arts, learning and shoe design, my next profession.
